$600,000 Case Closed on Eve of Trial

Driver Cuts Corner, Hits Pedestrian

Our client and her husband were walking their dog in their neighborhood after dark. There were no sidewalks or paved shoulders, so pedestrians routinely walked along the roadway.

As they walked along a narrow residential street, a vehicle approached and began making a left turn.

Instead of completing the turn into the proper side of the road, the vehicle cut the corner.

Our client's husband saw the headlights and warned her. She turned, saw the vehicle coming toward her, and expected the slow-moving vehicle to stop or move into the proper lane. It did neither.

The vehicle struck her right side, severely injuring her foot. As she tried to move away, it struck her again, injuring her left knee before knocking her to the ground.

The defense disputed how the collision happened and claimed our client had "suddenly appeared" in front of the vehicle.

So, we went to work.

Accident Reconstructionist — Driver at Fault

We retained an accident reconstruction expert and analyzed the intersection, vehicle path, speed, stopping distance, lighting, physical evidence and police body-camera footage.

One of the most important pieces of evidence was captured shortly after the crash.

On body-camera video, our client's husband—who witnessed the collision from only a few feet away—physically walked to the location where his wife had been struck and stood on the spot while explaining what he had seen.

That impact happened on the side of the roadway opposite from where the vehicle should have been driving!

When we compared the spot he identified immediately after the collision with our reconstruction expert's independent analysis, the locations were virtually identical.

Our client's flip-flops were also found in that same portion of the roadway, further supporting her account.

We also analyzed the vehicle's adaptive headlights. Our expert concluded that our client, who was wearing light-colored clothing, should have been illuminated with enough time and distance for an attentive driver to stop or steer away.

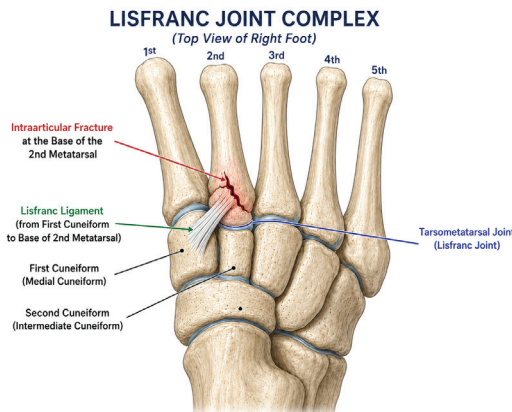

This was no longer simply one person's word against another.

The physical evidence told the story.

A Rare Injury

Our client suffered serious injuries to both lower extremities and left the hospital in a wheelchair, unable to bear weight on either leg.

One of her most significant injuries was a Lisfranc injury to the midfoot. The Lisfranc joint is small, but it bears tremendous force during standing, walking and climbing stairs.

Despite extensive therapy, specialized footwear, injections and other treatments, she continued to experience pain and instability. Her physicians have discussed surgery to stabilize the foot and the likelihood that she may eventually require a midfoot fusion.

Even the defense medical expert agreed that the collision caused the Lisfranc fracture and acknowledged that this type of joint injury can lead to arthritis that worsens over time.

The Details Matter

Cases like this remind us why preparation matters.

- A pair of shoes in the roadway.
- A few seconds of body-camera footage.
- The location where a witness stood shortly after a crash.
- The path of a turning vehicle.
- The reach of its headlights.
- A few words buried in a defense doctor's report.

Individually, those details may seem small. Together, they can completely change how a case is understood.

After extensive litigation, expert analysis, depositions and preparation for trial, the case was resolved for a significant dollar figure.

Our job is to find the details, understand what they mean, and put them together in a way that tells the full story. That is why preparation matters. ■

Once Again, Progressive Followed Its Stan

Partner Scott Perry recently resolved another case with Progressive after it tried to do everything it could to avoid paying on our client's case before ultimately paying its six-figure policy limits.

Our client was simply driving down the road when the Progressive insured driver failed to pay attention and turned directly in front of our client. This resulted in a violent crash with airbag deployment and our client striking the inside of her vehicle.

Despite liability being clear and our client going to the hospital from the scene to treat for both orthopedic injuries and a laceration to her head, Progressive took a position of refusing to accept full responsibility for over a year. Multiple times during

Bicyclist Struck by Motor Vehicle Highlights the Importance of Body Camera Footage

Attorneys Jason J. Guari and Keith R. Hedrick recently secured a six-figure settlement on behalf of a bicyclist who was struck from behind by a motor vehicle while riding in his own community. As a result of the crash, our client sustained significant injuries to his neck and back and ultimately required injection therapy to both areas. Thankfully, he was able to make a good recovery and is relieved to put this traumatic incident behind him.

One of the most important pieces of evidence in the case came from the body-worn cameras of the responding police officers. The footage captured the aftermath of the collision and provided valuable visual evidence concerning the position of the bicycle, the actions and statements of the motorist, and the condition and injuries of our client immediately following the crash. This type of evidence can be particularly important in bicycle and pedestrian cases, where the circumstances surrounding a collision may later become disputed. Body-camera footage can preserve what officers observed at the scene before memories fade and can provide an objective record that may help establish how an accident occurred and the condition of an injured person immediately afterward.

Bicyclists are particularly vulnerable when sharing the road with motor vehicles. Drivers should remain alert, maintain a proper lookout, allow adequate clearance when passing, and recognize that bicyclists have legal rights to use Florida roadways.

For bicyclists, wearing appropriate safety equipment and making yourself as visible as possible can be critical.

And when a collision does occur, evidence collected at the scene—including photographs, witness information, police reports, and body-worn camera footage—can be extremely important in determining what happened.

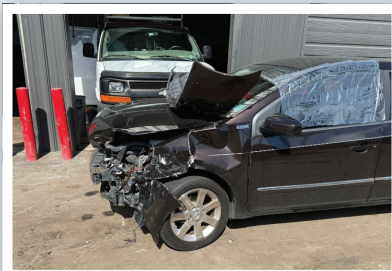

Our client is grateful to have reached a resolution that allows him to move forward from the accident and focus on his continued recovery. ■ that year, we refused to accept the unacceptably low offers that were well below the policy limits.

Ultimately, facing a lawsuit with clear liability, a wonderful client, boardable medical bills, and future damages that exceeded policy limits a full tender was made on the eve of the lawsuit being filed. Now our client can close this chapter in her life and know that a full recovery was made on her behalf.

"I'm incredibly grateful to Keith Hendrick and Joshua for their dedication and persistence in handling my case. They kept me informed at every step and treated me with the utmost professionalism. The warm reception I received upon entering the building was a standout, especially given the current decline in service across industries. This amazing team was honest, never giving false promises, but consistently reassured me they would fight for me. Their efforts and professionalism exceeded my expectations. Thank you to this wonderful team—highly recommended!"

I've just gotten done working with Jason and his team over the last couple of months, and I couldn't be happier with the process and results. Jason and Josh took me in on no notice at all, listened to my concerns and guided me professionally through the entire process without hesitation. Throughout the process I had many questions as this was my first time using a service like this, thankfully I was able to reach to either Jason or Josh at any time any day and my questions/concerns weren't just answered well but explained in depth. The communication of what was going on couldn't have been better, which I was nervous about because I've heard horror stories of friends using other firms to handle their legal needs. These guys take what they do serious and actually care about their client and they showed me that from the first day to the last. I would recommend this firm to anyone that should encounter anything needing their services. My case was resolved faster than I could have imagined, and I am more than happy with the results. I'm glad I found this group because what was originally a bad situation and a setback, through Jason's quick action and experience and Josh's patience and experience everything was turned around for the better. Without this group my year would have ended bitterly, now I can rest well known everything including my self was taken care of and I am in now a better position because of them.

"I was lucky enough to get to work with Jason Guari. Him, personally, as well as his partner and staff were all extremely helpful, personable and very relatable. They are extremely great with communication and professionalism while still holding a family feel. I had the pleasure of meeting and talking with a vast majority of his office and the demeanor never changed from one person to the next. Extremely welcoming and this is why I did not go to a big name where you are just a number. Thank you, Jason Guari, for the most pleasant experience a Lawyer can offer. I highly recommend!"
